In January and February 1991,
Central Command
Air Forces
(CENTAF)
conducted an air-to-
ground onslaught
against Iraq's Republican Guard.
The requirements of this operation conflicted with several aspects of the U.S. Air Force's preparations for a European battleground. The low-altitude tactics CENTAF crews had practiced for the previous decade and a half were unsuitable for the task at hand. This study examines how effectively CENTAF adjusted air operations against the Republican Guards to the changing realities of combat. The extent to which existing USAF doctrine prepared CENTAF for this operation provides a baseline for the amount of adaptation required. The subsequent narrative identifies tactical innovations developed during the operation, the main elements of adaptive process, those factors that helped and hindered the process, and the innovations. Initial F-16 and B-52

attacks on the Republican Guard
registered little success. In response, CENTAF
launched six
significant tactical
innovations in one week: A-10 deep

interdiction, A-10
reconnaissance, F-

operations, F-16
forward basing,
F-111 and F-15E
"Tank Plinking," and
the use of cockpit
videotape as a
bomb damage
assessment (BDA)
source. These innovations required

CENTAF aviators to create new tactics as they conducted operations.

CENTAF's effectiveness against the Guard divisions improved, resulting in greater destruction of Iraqi forces. Critically weakened by air attack, the two Guard divisions that stood and fought were annihilated during the campaign's ground phase. CENTAF's adaptation to the realities of war in the Gulf, accomplished with impressive speed, was facilitated by four conditions.

This book argues that Network Centric Warfare (NCW) influences how developed militaries operate in the same fashion that an operating system influences the development of computer software. It examines three inter-related issues:

Online Library
Land Power The Coalition And Iraqi
Armies Desert

the overwhelming military power of the United States; the growing influence of NCW on military thinking; and the centrality of coalition operations in modern military endeavours.

Irrespective of terrorist threats and local insurgencies,

Online Library
Land Power The

the present international structure is remarkably stable - none of the major powers seeks to alter the system from its present liberal character, as demonstrated by the lack of a military response to US military primacy.

Online Library
Land Power The

This primacy privileges the American military doctrine and thus the importance of NCW, which promises a future of rapid, precise, and highly efficient operations, but also a future predicated on the "digitization" of the battle space.

Participation in future American-led military endeavours will require coalition partners to be networked:

“interoperability” will therefore be a key consideration of a partner’s strategic worth. Network Centric Warfare and Coalition Operations

Echevarria finds that the American way of war is not astrategic, apolitical, or defined by the use of overwhelming force. Instead, the American way of war was driven more by political considerations than military ones, and

Russian conservatism
is making a forceful
return after a century
of experimenting with socialism and
liberalism.

Conservatism is about managing change by ensuring that modernization evolves organically by building on the past. Conservatism has a natural attraction for Russia as its thousand-year long history is largely characterized by revolutionary change - the destructive process of uprooting the past to give way to and the threat of economic collapse and then faced a further threat to political stability as the desire for a negotiated peace grew in the factories, in the corridors of Westminster, and even in the British army in France. He relates how Lloyd George and his Conservative

Writers, observers,
and practitioners of
international politics
frequently invoke
the term
"geopolitics" to
describe, explain, or analyze specific
foreign policy issues
and problems. Such generalized usage

ignores the fact that geopolitics as a method of understanding international relations has a history that includes a common vocabulary, well-established if sometimes conflicting concepts,

classical analyses to contemporary

events, Sempa

traditional

geopolitical theories
in explaining the outcome of the Cold

the struggle between the Western allies
and the Soviet empire was unique
in its ideological
component and

nuclear standoff, the Cold War fits into a recurring geopolitical pattern. It can be seen as a consequence of competition between land powers and sea powers, and between a potential Eurasian hegemonic power and a coalition of states opposed to that would-be hegemony. The collapse of the Soviet empire ended the most recent threat to global stability. Acting as a successor to the British Empire, the United States organized, funded,
