

Professor Was A Thief

A Southwestern sleuth tries to retrieve some relics—and solve a murder—in a novel by an author who “knows how to hook the reader from the get-go” (Albuquerque Journal). Pot thief Hubie Schuze is back, and this time his larceny is for a good cause. He wants to recover sacred relics lifted from San Roque, a mysterious pueblo that is closed to outsiders. Usually Hubie finds his pottery a few feet underground—but these artifacts are one hundred fifty feet above the New Mexico soil, on the top floor of the Rio Grande Lofts. Hubie will need all his deductive skills to craft the perfect plan—which is thwarted when he encounters the beautiful Stella. And then he is arrested for murder. That tends to happen when you are in the room with the body, with blood on your hands. Follow Hubie as he stays one step ahead of security toughs, one step behind Stella, and never too far from a long fall. The Pot Thief Who Studied Ptolemy is the 2nd book in the Pot Thief Mysteries, but you may enjoy reading the series in any order.

Lana is back to her old tricks, stealing from the rich to give to...well, to give to herself really. And once again she has drawn the wrong kind of attention, this time from sleazy casino owners and small-time drug dealers...not to mention self proclaimed 'survival' experts, who have an unhealthy obsession with sniper rifles. It is now up to Chris and Dunc to find and save the young thief, before she makes one final, fatal mistake. Meanwhile, General Anders of the Special Defence Force is on an urgent mission. A thousand innocent people are dead, killed when their liner is ambushed in deep space. The motive is elusive, as are the identities of those who committed the atrocity. What is clear, however, is that Anders' former commanding officer, a certain General Thyrod, is somehow involved, and that a strange, alien artefact lies at the heart of the mystery. Aided by his unorthodox ship and crew, Anders must now solve the crime before more innocent lives are lost.

This is an allegorical tale of the events that took place in an Islamic research think tank. The place will be referred to as the Fabricatory. The reason is that fabrication took place there. It was a fabrication of knowledge. The events in this account exemplify what was termed the "paralysis of the Muslim mind." The paralysis resulted from the vilification of reasoning, from the unwarranted association of the use of reason to explain revelation as kufr or unbelief. Fraud takes different forms, for example a misappropriation of funds. But it also takes place in the form of a misappropriation of academic writing, known as plagiarism. Fraud is encountered not just in politics, but also in the academia. A fish rots from the head. Theft of academic work takes place even though Islam prescribes severe punishment for theft, even by alleged "experts" in Islamic sciences. Fraud is a result of the divorce of ethics from the teaching of revelation. There is no tradition about ethics or justice. Is this accidental? How did this happen? It happened as a result of a re-articulation of the teaching of revelation. This re-interpretation, enabled by the disparagement of reason, upgraded tradition and marginalized revelation. The effect of these developments was the eclipse of revelation by tradition. People followed tradition in tandem with revelation. There were two revelations: The Quran and tradition. These were eventually supplemented and supplanted by a third root of the law, the works of jurists. They became legislators. Jurists became the final arbiters of what was permitted and what was prohibited. The Fabricatory aimed to further the renewal of the Muslim sciences. In reality, it was having the reverse effects. This took place by encouraging following through taqlid or unquestioning following. This transpired on the watch of Professor Parrott. He was entrusted to spearhead the project of the renewal of the Muslim civilization. We refer to a knowledgeable person as a "gentleman and a scholar." Parrott was neither. He followed the "majority," even when it was wrong. Parrott was raised in a poor country. He managed to fool people, neither excluding nor excusing the present narrator. But truth prevails. Through his acts he revealed himself, again and again, as a fraud. Parrott wrote that tradition is to be followed, even if it is "against reason." He wrote that tradition is a "part of revelation." He accepted the corruption of the teaching of revelation he inherited from his predecessors. He was a "follower." His life reflected that of the Muslim civilization: "they followed their rabbis and priests who misled them." Is the excessive reverence for rabbis and priests hampering the renewal of the faith? We hear "traditional" Muslims refer to this or that jurist as "great." The efforts of jurists transformed Islam into "traditional" and "political" Islam, respectively. Jurists accomplished the first with the elevation of tradition to revelation. They accomplished the second with the "abrogation" of hundred and twenty peace verses by the ayah as-sayf. Jurists also assert that revelation prescribes the death for apostasy or adultery. By these actions, jurists transformed the sharia into an endorsement of acts based on spurious traditions that flout the teaching of revelation, reported by persons who were not prophets. Matters were worsened by the rejection of the relationship between action and reaction or cause and effect. The anti-rational persons laid the foundations for the fall of the Muslim empire. For a person who does not see a relationship between his action and the reaction it may trigger cannot be responsible; he becomes unable to foresee the effects of his actions: he becomes handicapped. The Abbasid rulers who slaughtered Mongol traders and ambassadors in their arrogance could not foresee the reactions of their actions thanks to the teaching of those who denied the connection between cause and effect.

When Pop starts searching for the story's source, a professor named Pertwee, he lands in the middle of the story of a century after the Empire State Building, Grant's Tomb and Grand Central Station all disappear. Apparently, Pertwee's the mastermind behind it all. But Pop soon discovers that, instead of inventing a new way to blow things up, the professor may be doing quite the opposite.*

All the plotters needed was a believable story, desperate and frightening, but false. Nothing bad was supposed to happen. They were only crying wolf. But what if the wolf were real? For someone in the shadows is listening, someone who thinks he deserves an even brighter future. Now a risky but basically innocent game will take a horrifying turn. . . .*

It is 1959 when thirteen-year-old Claire McGlaughlin's parents leave for Kenya on a missionary trip. She is sent to live with her grandmother in boring old Holly Springs, Mississippi—where nothing interesting ever happens. Soon, Claire finds she has a friend in local boy Ralphie. Even better, she discovers that the small town has a mystery, and then Holly Springs becomes anything but dull. A rash of burglaries and rumors of a cold case murder send this budding writer into investigative mode. The nice folk of Holly Springs would never admit to anything bad happening in their hometown, especially bad things perpetrated by one of their own. They go so far as to deny a murder ever occurred, but Claire is sure they must be hiding something. With the help of her new pal, Claire sets out to solve the mystery. Along the way, Claire and Ralphie make the acquaintance of vicious dogs, a shotgun-waving crazy lady, and an angry sheriff . What's more, an unknown Mary Cassatt painting and a dog with mysterious powers may be the keys to unraveling a mystery that has haunted the town of Holly Springs for much too long. "This inspiring novel of teenage angst set in a small Southern town captures the emotions of doubt, rejection, and love. It provides a convincing demonstration of the resilience of teenagers who are so often dismissed by adults who cannot see beyond their myopic preconceptions of adolescence (and have forgotten their own teenage years)." —B. C. Crawford, Educator, Oxford, Mississippi

Parrott was expected to be a reformer. He had a reputation of being a knowledgeable person. He wrote and published books that became references at Harvard, where he was even offered a job. But he could not do what he was tasked with. Subscriptions to the Institute's flagship journal went from thirteen in the first year to none seven years later. The reason he could not succeed is because he followed tradition. He could not do what he was asked to do. He was a reincarnation of Faust and Fagin. A person could not carry on a conversation with him. After a few sentences, he would run out of things to say. He responded with ready-made phrases, like a parrot. That was "world renowned" professor Parrott. He suffered from a paralysis of mind due to the unquestioning following of tradition. He reminded the Apprentice of Sid, the brother of Tom Sawyer, in the well-known book by Mark Twain. Sid was always ratting on Tom. Sid was the conformist; Tom was the authentic person. The "two faces" of Parrott reflect the two faces of Islam. There is Islam as the religion of peace, and there is militant Islam, the religion of war by the "abode of peace" against the "abode of war."

From the beloved author of All Quiet on the Western Front, Flotsam is a terrifying portrait of Europe as the Nazi state takes over the continent. Political dissidents, Jews, medical students, petty criminals: Among the thousands of displaced persons on the unpaved roads of Europe, there are Steiner and Kern. Both have irritated officials for overstaying their two-week visas in Czechoslovakia. And so they must leave. Not that either has any place to go. Not in 1939. But when a man is led to the border of one country, he must try another. Until he is escorted from that one too. Living hand-to-mouth, selling his wares for a few pennies, Steiner and Kern find that, remarkably, there are still pleasures to be had. Paris, for one; love, for another. For amid the heartless cruelty and cold-blooded laws of the Nazi state, there is still humanity and kindness. And there is the incomparable joy in falling in love, surviving, and telling your story so it is never forgotten. "The world has a great need of such a man," says Maria Remarque. He is a craftsman of unquestionably first rank, a man who can bend language to his will. Whether of animate or of inanimate nature, his touch is sensitive, firm, and sure."—The New York Times Book Review

In the spring of 1994, Daniel Spiegelman shinnied up an abandoned book lift in Columbia University's Butler Library rare books floor where he then proceeded to dismantle a wall, steal books, reassemble the wall, and sneak back down. In a three-month period he did this more than a dozen times. He eventually escaped with the loot - roughly $1.8 million worth of books and manuscripts - to Europe to sell to collectors. When he was caught in the Netherlands, he tried to avoid extradition by telling the Dutch authorities that he was a financier of the Oklahoma City bombing knowing they wouldn't extradite him. He was facing the death penalty. Eventually the FBI, through some wrangling, got him back to New York, where he finally confessed to his crimes. In vivid detail, including a retelling of the crimes, dialogue from the court transcripts, and explanations of the consequences and intricacies, McDade recounts all the sordid elements of this true crime caper.

Book 2 in the Professor Fartypants adventures series. Professor Fartyphant's sausages have been stolen! He sets out to find who could be the thief. His findings are unexpected and he finds more than the thief - he finds love. Another light-hearted adventure with friendship and lots of farting!

Life on the waves as a pirate is boring and profitless for Declan. So surely taking charge by single-handedly murdering his captain could only improve the situation? Limited experience and the desire for riches mean very little when you're faced against torrential weather, killer wildlife, starvation, monsters, the law, and that one guy who really wants to kill you for some reason. A comedy novel written for young adults by a young adult, professionally edited and published by ... erm ... a professional editing and publishing company. This isn't just some half-hearted bit of homework left lying around by a sixth former, this is over two years in the making and is ... funny ... really funny! The author has abandoned thoughts of university in favour of working as a comedy writer. If you, or the person you are thinking of buying it for, likes pirates then this is the book to get. If you aren't that fussed about pirates, then get it because it is just funny. If you like neither pirates nor comedy, then get the book because it has a nice cover.

How is academia portrayed in children's literature? This Element ambitiously surveys fictional professors in texts marketed towards children, who are overwhelmingly white and male, tending to be elderly scientists. Professors fall into three stereotypes: the vehicle to explain scientific facts, the baffled genius, and the evil madman. By the late twentieth century, the stereotype of the male, mad, muddlehead, called Professor SomethingDumb, is formed in humorous yet pejorative fashion. This Element provides a publishing history of the role of academics in children's literature, questioning the book culture which promotes the enforcement of stereotypes regarding intellectual expertise in children's media. This title is also available, with additional material, as Open Access.
